Summer School
Social Protest and Social Movements in Historical and Contemporary Perspectives

Where do social movements come from? Who takes part in them? What are their aims? And what methods do historians and social scientist use for their scientific research?

Under the supervision of Prof. Stefan Berger, Prof. Sabrina Zajak and Prof. Eva Gerharz, the Institute for Social Movements will conduct an interdisciplinary summer school throughout the summer semester 2016 to find answers to these questions. During the Summer School we will engage with social movements in international, transnational, comparative and interdisciplinary perspectives. In particular we will focus on a wide variety of social movements from Europe and the global South.

Preparatory Meeting:
22th June 2016 12-14 (Institute for Social Movements)
Learn more about how the Summer School will look like and share your expectations.

Summer School:
19th to 23rd September 2016 (Institute for Social Movements)
Familiarize yourself with diverse social movements and share your ideas in different discussion formats with experts and fellow students.

Future Workshop:
28th September 2016, 12-16 (Institute for Social Movements)
Develop future scenarios for social movements and social change.
